COAT OF ARMS OF THE MURPHY FAMILY

FOREWORD

The purpose of this brief work is not to furnish the pedigree of any particular family or group of families bearing the name of Murphy, or to make a continuous connection between those who now bear the name and some distinguished ancestor, whose distinction might be sufficient to shed its lustre over all of his descendants; for two reasons, the first being that a work thus limited would require the support of subscriptions made by those interested in its publication, as the prospect of profit from the sale of such a work would not be sufficient to invite the labor of gathering the necessary material and making the research that the execution of such a work would demand, and the second reason being that to present an authentic, unbroken lineage having its course run through the common people of Ireland, presents almost unsurmountable difficulties, because during the last three centuries, owing to political, industrial, and social conditions, involving poverty and ignorance, and the decimation of the people by war and famine, and the great exodus from the country continued through these several centuries, to escape conditions of hardship; that which has been the pride and boast of its people, the clan genealogy, was almost utterly neglected.

Owing to the long continuance of tribal government in Ireland and the existence of a special class, whose duty it was to preserve the genealogies of the ruling families and to commemorate the deeds of family progenitors, there were in Ireland some of the most ancient pedigrees to be found among any European people.

From Elizabeth's accession, in 1559, the political disturbance attended by industrial depression brought about by restrictions on Irish commerce and manufacturing, resulted in poverty, which commenced to work a sad change in the spirit of the people, and as they gradually became the social inferiors of the English who lived among them and who represented in their country the conqueror, they lost their pride of race, which had maintained an almost religious preservation of the ancestral line.

Hundreds of thousands left Ireland during the succeeding century to serve in foreign armies, and the exodus has continued in an ever increasing volume until it expanded into the tremendous emigration of the last century, which sent millions to the United States, Australia and the Argentine Republic.

To connect all the links between the present day and the middle of the 16th century would be a most difficult task. However, in a general historical treatment of the family genealogy, while not able to follow the latter day ramifications, the records present much of exceeding interest. It is possible to begin with the eponym of the family and follow the lineage for many centuries with the certain assurance that although the surname is radically changed from the original patronymic, it has merely followed the phonetic changes in the language, and, incredible as it may appear to some, it is almost certain that any member of the Murphy family in perusing these pages will read of his progenitors and other members of the family to which he belonged, even back to the first centuries of the Christian era.

Greater confidence is placed by scholars in these Irish genealogical records than almost any similar records. They accord with archæological investigations, and many of the facts in these records synchronize with other historical references.

To add interest to the work, biographical sketches have been added of persons of the name who have attained prominence in this country and in the family's native land. Also, a tabulated Roll of Honor of those who surrendered, or hazarded their lives in the establishment of this free government, or in the wars waged for its defense and maintenance.

THE MURPHY FAMILY

Regrettable as the fact is, candor demands that we record that it was through the immediate agency of a member of the Murphy family that English authority first gained strength in Ireland. The author of this calamity, which meant so much to the Irish people, was Dermot McMorough, King of Leinster. He was born in the year 1090, and his family had been the ruling power of the province for several generations.

It must be remembered that tribal government continued at this time in Ireland to almost the same extent as in the days of Patrick, and this meant the existence of tribal jealousies and constant inter-tribal turmoil; while, on the other hand, England, which had inherited from the Romans the feudal system of government, had consolidated into a strong power, and recognizing in the tribal system the disorganization of Ireland, the ambition had been growing for the subjection of that territory to the power of the English sovereign.

Henry II occupied the English throne and an Englishman named Nicholas Breakspeare occupied the see of Rome, and is known to history as Pope Adrian IV. The Pope, probably impelled to some extent by a desire to further the ambitions of his countrymen, and also influenced by the fact that the church of Patrick did not conform in many matters of discipline and in the observance of feast days with the Roman discipline, except the Danish and Norman element of the Irish, issued a bull in the year 1157 authorizing Henry II to exercise temporal authority over Ireland. This command of the Pope was communicated to the bishops and abbots and all ecclesiastical authorities in Ireland, and it produced a divided sentiment among the people, who felt that they owed a duty to the ecclesiastical head of the church and were yet impelled to resist his authority in this respect from patriotic impulses.

At this time, Dermot McMorough, then King of Leinster, was ousted from his sovereignty by one Roderick O'Connor, a rival claimant to the throne, and, lacking the support to reinstate himself, he took advantage of the Pope's decree authorizing English sovereignty in Ireland, and repaired to King Henry II of England, who was at that time in France, who received him cordially, and acquiesced in his project, and authorized him under the royal hand and seal to enlist an army among the Saxons to go with him to Ireland, armed with which he repaired to England and had the authority of Henry publicly read at Bristol, England, and at the same time he promised large rewards to all persons of influence who would lend their services to him in recovering his lost territories. It was here he met DeClare, Earl of Pembroke, and to him he promised to give his daughter Eva in marriage and that he should succeed him in the sovereignty of Leinster. In Wales he associated Robert Fitz-Stevens. This incursion of Anglo-Normans occurred in the years 1169 and 1170. The war was then carried on with all the barbarity and vengeance which attended military operations in those days, and McMorough was re-established in power in Leinster, and Roderick O'Connor utterly routed.

The historical account of this struggle gives O'Connor and his Irish retainers credit for a most valiant defense. McMorough died one year after. The DeClare title to supremacy was disputed with the result of further internecine strife, the outcome of which indicated that the Anglo-Norman element had come to remain.

All historical accounts denounce McMorough as a traitor to his country for relying upon the Saxons, but this judgment must be modified by the knowledge that his idea of patriotism demanded that fealty to his clan should take precedence of all other considerations, and while a personal and selfish greed for power, and a desire for revenge, stimulated him to adopt the measures which he did, it cannot be looked upon as treasonable to a nation which was not then consolidated to such an extent that a spirit of nationality prevailed.

THE FAMILY SEAT.

The original Murphy family seat in Ireland was in the barony of Ballaghkeen (meaning in Irish "The pleasant roadway") in the easterly part of the County Wexford, at Castle Ellis and Ouleartleagh (in Irish "Grey orchard"). The country of the O'Murphy family is still called "Murroes." The family belonged to the tribe of the Hy-Felimy, and Murphy and Murrough and Morrin are Anglicized forms of the name of the original ancestor from which the name is derived. MacMuircatha, written also O'Muirchada, also O'Muirchu (Muircatha in Irish means a sea battle, and Muirchu a sea warrior).

The last head of the family resided at Oulartleagh, and, according to the Book of Rights, p. 208, the family retained their property until very recently.

See Dr. O'Donovan's "Antiquities," preserved in the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin.

FAMILY GENEALOGY.

The family was the most intimately connected with the coming of the English of any in Ireland, and they took an active part in the severe fighting, in which Earl Strongbow, Robert FitzStephens, Maurice FitzGerald and Maurice de Prendergast and their associates and retainers in 1169 aided Dermot McMurrough to reinstate himself as King of Leinster, who had been deposed by Roderick O'Connor.

The family is now scattered all over Ireland, and is the most numerous name in the country.

In a special report, by Robert Mathewson, of "Surnames in Ireland," based on the population of 1890, it is stated that there are 62,600 of the name of Murphy. In Cork and Wexford they are the oldest settlers. The following is a list of the birthrate of Murphys in the various counties, where there are five or more of the name, in the year 1890, and is based on the census of 1890:

County.	Relative Birth-Rate.	Births.	County.	Relative Birth-Rate.	Births.

It will be seen that, although the name of Murphy is the most numerous in the country at large, it does not occupy the leading place in many of the counties.

In the Province of Leinster, in two counties only — Wexford and Carlow — does it stand first in birthrate.

With regard to the name in the former county, the Earl of Courtown, in a recent paper on "The Celts and Teutons in Ireland," remarks as follows: "Murphy is the Anglicized form of McMorrough, the old regal family of Leinster. On the death of Dermot McMorrough, the last acknowledged King of Leinster, his rights, by English law, passed to his only legitimate child, Eva, wife of Richard de Clare, Earl of Pembroke, known as Strongbow. The legitimate male line was continued in the descendants of Dermod's brother, Morrough, who continue to hold lands in North Wexford."

A prominent member of the family, in the fourteenth century, did much to redeem the family name from the shadow that was cast upon it on account of Dermod McMorrough's invitation to the English to assist him two hundred years before. This historical character was Art McMurrough, 2d.

ART. McMURROUGH, 2d.

Art. McMurrough, 2d, reached the age of manhood at a time favorable to his genius and enterprise. Born in 1357, he was at the age of sixteen noted for his chivalry, hospitality and general good qualities. In 1365, when but eighteen years, he was elected to succeed his father. At this time there was a feeling of discontent among the surrounding clans as well as his own, owing to the injustice of the English Government in their ever strong desire and greed to acquire more land. To make a concerted effort of resistance, they waited only for a chief of distinguished ability. This chief they found where they would naturally look for him — among the old ruling families of the province.

That the English settlers were not unaware of the promise that this young chief gave out, is proven from the fact of their paying voluntary tribute to his house — as according to the old usage, in order to conciliate him.

Arthur married a noble lady of the Pale, whose estates had been confiscated by the "Statute of Kilkenny" according to English ideas. The estates consisted of the Barony of Norraugh in Kildare, which included Naas and its neighborhood. This, McMorrough demanded restored fully, under threat of joining the Earl of Desmond in Munster and ravaging the country.

His power as a leader had been steadily increasing. In 1392 he received a severe check from James, the third, Earl of Ormond, when six hundred of his clansmen were left dead on the field.

This defeat was, however, more than doubly avenged by the capture of New Ross, which in point of strength was next to Dublin at this time. It could muster to its own defense twelve hundred long-bowmen, twelve hundred pikemen and one hundred and four horsemen. The capture of such a place proved very encouraging to the followers of McMorrough. He razed the walls, carrying off gold, silver and hostages. Very soon after the Battle of New Ross, King Richard landed in Waterford with a force of thirty thousand bowmen and four thousand men-at-arms, a force in those days considered sufficient to subjugate any kingdom, and exceeding in numbers armies that since then have succeeded in changing the map of the world to a great extent. Great pains were taken by Richard to impress the Irish with the splendor and power of this array. Accompanying him were the highest dignitaries of Britain, both lay and ecclesiastic.

Many of the Irish princes were hypnotized by the flattery of the king, but they did not quite understand his proposition to them to surrender their land and chieftancies for pensions and royal titles. Art. McMorrough was proof against flattery and cajolery. He snapped his fingers at the king's invitation to come to court. Richard accordingly sent Marshal Mowbray to treat with the obdurate king of Leinster. The conference took place on the plain of Ballylong, near Carlow.

Art. proved himself a statesman as well as a soldier in this conference. After alternate attempts to palaver and intimidate Art., Mowbray had to report to his monarch that the Prince of Leinster would not treat with an inferior, and instead of yielding up his lands, demanded the immediate restoration of his wife's estates. The indignation of the king can well be imagined at this message. He would crush this haughty Irish prince who dared resist his authority and ignore royal favors! The king, therefore, placed himself at the head of his vast army, with the grim determination of annihilating McMorrough and his followers. The vastness of his army proved more of a hindrance to Richard than a help. He found his march harrassed at every step.

McMorrough's superior military skill, combined with the patriotism of the people, proved the undoing of the king. Unable to supply commissariat arrangements for his large army after Art. had swept the country clean of fodder and supplies, Richard's sole object now was to keep his army from starvation. McMorrough played havoc now, separating cavalry from infantry, and from his thorough knowledge of the country, leading detachments of the enemy into bogs and morasses and cutting them down.

He finally had what was left of King Richard's splendid army of thirty-four thousand men stuck fast in the Wicklow mountains, when the king deemed it the better part of valor to sue for peace. Accordingly, a deputation was sent to the heroic Irish prince with humble apologies and an invitation to a conference with the king at Dublin. He was told that his valor and wisdom were much appreciated by the king, and if he would but honor his majesty by accepting the invitation, he would be the "royal guest." Art. acceded and permitted the royal forces to proceed to Dublin, crestfallen and defeated, with their silken banners and canopies in tattered rags, presenting on the whole a far different appearance than the army that came to hypnotize and frighten the clan McMorrough.

Art. went to Dublin a couple of months later, according to invitation and promise, where Richard, after some difficulty, had again established a court. The Prince of Leinster had not been very long at court before he had made up his mind that he was in the hands of treacherous and designing foes. He was seized and imprisoned on a charge of "conspiring against the king." If Richard's purpose was to take the life of McMorrough, he must have changed his mind, for he released him soon after, but held three of his chieftains as hostages. Some historians say that he exacted some sort of a promise of submission from Art., but it is more likely that he was given the liberty of the court in order that some "accident" might occur to him whereby Richard's purpose would be as well served, without the possible embarrassments that might have arisen from deliberately putting him to death. Not long afterwards, surely enough, a trap was laid for McMorrough. He was invited to dinner at one of the Norman border castles — to a friendly feast. As he was dining, the sharp eye of his bard detected some very suspicious movements that told him there was something irregular afoot. He did not want to warn his master openly, knowing that their lives would be forfeited if they manifested any knowledge of the conditions which surrounded them. The quick-witted bard, striking up an old Irish air, began to sing to the music in the Gaelic tongue. The words caught the ear of McMorrough and conveyed a warning to him to be calm and collected, for his life was in danger. McMorrough, maintaining a calm demeanor and seizing a favorable excuse for reaching the yard, sprang to his horse and, sword in hand, hewed his way to freedom.

McMorrough now, after this second act of perfidy on the part of the English, declared war to the bitter end with the English settlers. Reading of this five hundred years later, it is difficult for the reader to conceive the enormity of such a declaration. That he had become a master of military science is proven by his defeat of the ablest generals that England could pit against him for twenty years.

He captured the strongly fortified town of Carlow in 1397 and the next year fought the battle of Kenlis, when the heir-presumptive of the English crown fell, whose death was one of the contributory causes of the War of the Roses in England a few years later.

Richard now fitted out another expedition for the subjugation of Ireland and the eradication of McMorrough. One hundred marks in gold were offered for the capture of Art., dead or alive. Preparations for the campaign were abruptly ended, however, and Dublin thrown into consternation by the news that civil war had broken out in England.

Richard hurried to Waterford and took shipping from there, only to find the banished Lancaster returned and himself a crownless monarch. He was most treacherously and cruelly put to death afterwards in Pontifract Castle.

For the next eighteen years the invincible McMorrough reigned unmolested over his territory. The next campaign against Art. was conducted by the Duke of Lancaster, son of the king and lord lieutenant of Ireland. A powerful army was sent southward against McMorrough and his allies. McMorrough was not idle in the mean time, but poured his cohorts through Sculloge Gap on the garrison of Wexford, capturing in quick succession the castles of Cumolins, Teons and Enniscorthy. The English now began to pour additional troups into the country, besides recruiting from the Anglo-Irish within the Pale.

These preparations terminated in the battle of Athcroe. McMorrough took the initiative in this compaign, bringing the war into the enemy's territory. The English were led in this battle by four of the most distinguished and efficient leaders at the king's command: Jenicho d'Artors, Sir Edward Powers, Sir Thomas Butler, and the king's son, the Duke of Lancaster. McMorrough had O'Byrne, O'Nolan and other chiefs, besides his sons and nephews. The number on each side has been variously estimated from twelve to seventeen thousand, and it has been considered one of the most decisive battles of those times. The English were utterly routed. The duke was carried back to Dublin wounded and the valley of the Liffy and the slopes of Inchicore were strewn with the wounded and dead. Athcroe means the Ford of Slaughter in Irish. The city of Dublin was filled with lamentation and dismay.

While McMorrough lived, no other attempts were made against him by the English, as they evidently had had enough of his medicine.

We devote considerable space to this chieftain, as we consider him the staunchest warrior that Ireland has ever produced in either ancient or modern times. After forty-four years of fighting in defense of his country, he died January 12, 1417, at the age of sixty years. He died from poison given him in a drink by a woman on the wayside, whether by design or accident has never been ascertained.

He has been described by the Four Masters as a "man distinguished for his hospitality, knowledge and feats of arms; a man full of prosperity and royalty; a founder of churches and monasteries by his bounties and contributions."

Some of his family adopted the name of "Kavanaugh."

CONNALL O'MORCHOE.

According to O'Hart's "Irish Pedigrees," the last member of the Murphy family to have preserved family rights at Castle Ellis, Wexford, was Connall O'Morchoe (now modernized Murphy), who lived at Tobberlimich, County Wexford, who died in 1634, and was buried at Castle Ellis. O'Hart gives as his authority Molineaux's "Visitation of the County Wexford," preserved in the office of Ulster, King-of-Arms, at Castle Dublin. He was the 26th in the Murphy generation, being the son of Donal, the 25th in line after Seicne, the founder of the family. The family originated as an off-shoot of the Dowling family, and Seicne, who leads the table of Murphy pedigrees, was the son of Brandubh O'Dowling, who is recorded in O'Hart's Irish Pedigrees as the 99th in the line of succession of the O'Dowling family. O'Hart starts the Murphy pedigree registration with the number 100, in order that there might be no confusion in following the line through the O'Dowling family. This extensive line of pedigrees carries the family back to the earliest centuries of the Christian era.

Beginning with Connall O'Morchoe, who died, as above stated, in 1634, and whose body lies at Castle Ellis, O'Hart traces the family through some of its branches to the year 1880, as follows:

DESCENDANTS OF CONNALL O'MORCHOE.

26. Connall O'Morchoe of Tobberlimnich, County Wexford: his son; married Joan, daughter of Donal on Spaineach ("spaineach," Irish for Spaniard) Kavanagh of Clonmullen, County Carlow, and had five sons and seven daughters:

I. Teige, married Anne, daughter of David Redmond of Rahin-Callengallen, gent.
II. Phelim, died young.
III. Pierce, unmarried.
IV. David, unmarried.
V. Gerald, died young.

I. Joan, eldest daughter, married James, son of Donoch O'Morchoe of Ruanmore, gent.
II. Elinor, married Edmund O'Morchoe of Ballymacdonaghfyn, gent.

III. Mary. IV. Ellenor. V. Elizabeth. VI. Honor. According to "Molineaux's Visitation of the County Wexford," preserved in the Office of Ulster, King-of-Arms, the Castle Dublin, this Connal O'Morchoe died 1634, and was buried at Castle Ellis. It may be right here to observe that the name of "O'Morchoe" is now modernized Murphy.

27. Teige: eldest son of Conall.

28. Art (or Arthur) of Ballyellen, County Carlow: his son; living in 1690; died without issue; had two younger brothers: 1. Tiege, who died unmarried; 2. Edmund, born 1693, died May 16th, 1763, and was buried in Old Leighlin Churchyard, County Carlow. This Edmund had four sons:

I. David, born 1723; died 3d Sept., 1777.
II. James, born 1730; died 12th Oct., 1754.
III. Daniel, born 1740; died 27th Dec., 1777.
IV. Andrew (of whom presently), born 1741; died 28th Sept., 1793. (As far as we can find, David, James and Daniel, here mentioned, died unmarried.

29. Andrew, of Ballyellen, fourth son of Edmund, third son of Teige: born 1741; died 1793, and was also buried in Old Leighlin Churchyard, County Carlow; married Margaret Dunn, and had five sons and one daughter:

I. Edmund, born 1779; died 17th Dec., 1837, unmarried.
II. James, born 1782; died 26th Dec., 1857, unmarried.
III. Daniel (of whom presently), born 1785; died 17th Nov., 1846.
IV. David, born 1789; died 8th May, 1829; married and left two daughters.
V. Michael, born 1790; died 30th Nov., 1862, unmarried.
I. The daughter died young.

30. Daniel Murphy of Ballyellen, County Carlow, Ireland, and afterward of Montreal, Canada: third son of Andrew; born 1785; removed to Canada in 1824, where he resided until his death, in 1846. He married, in 1817, Mary, daughter of Peter Byrne of Knockullard, gentleman, and his wife, Diana Rudkin of Corris, County Carlow, and had five sons and two daughters:

I. Edward, born in 1818, in parish of Dunleckney, County Carlow, who is No. 131 in this pedigree.
II. Peter-Sarsfield, born in Corris, County Carlow; married, 1851, to Jane-Amelia, daughter of Allen Perry: issue in (1880) one son and three daughters.
III. Bernard-Rudkin, born in Corris, County Carlow; dead.
IV. Daniel, born in Montreal, Canada, 1824; dead.
V. Patrick-Alexander, born in Montreal; unmarried in 1880.
I. Margaret-Diana, born in Montreal; married, in 1865, A. A. Meilleur, M.D. and LL.D., of Montreal.
II. Eliza-Anne, born in Montreal; dead.

31. Edward Murphy of Montreal, Canada, J. P.: eldest son of Daniel; born in 1818 and living in 1880; married first in Jan., 1848, to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas McBride of County Donegal, Ireland, gentleman, and by her had two sons and three daughters:

I. Edward-Byrne Murphy, dead.
II. Patrick-Sarsfield Murphy, dead.
I. Mary, married, in 1871, to Edward C. Monk, son of the Hon. Samuel Cornwallis Monk, one of Her Majesty's Justices of Appeal for the Province of Quebec.
II. Elizabeth-Diana, a nun, in religion "Sister Mary Edward," dead.

III. Emily-Hester, living in 1880.

Secondly, in Feb., 1863, this Edward Murphy married Maria-Georgiana, daughter of the Hon. William Power, judge of the Superior Court of Quebec, Canada, and by her had one son and three daughters:

III. William-Sarsfield Murphy, who is No. 132 infra.
IV. Grace-Maria, living in 1880.
V. Amy-Susan, living in 1880.
VI. Alice-Lily, dead.

32. William-Sarsfield Murphy: eldest surviving son of Edward, of Montreal; living in 1880.

Several descendants of this family still reside in or around Montreal, Canada.

EARLY MURPHY PEDIGREE.

The lineage of the family from the time it assumed a separate family existence from the Dowling branch is given by O'Hart as follows:

100. Seicne: son of Brandubh.
101. Seagal ("seagal": Irish, rye; Fr., "seigle"; Lat., "secale"): his son; had a brother, Nochan, who was ancestor of Hanrahan of Leinster.
102. Mochtighearna: his son.
103. Dungal: his son.
104. Aodh Fionn: his son.
105. Alioli: his son.
106. Aongus: his son.
107. Muir-cath (Muirchu or Morogh): his son; a quo MacMuircatha ("muircatha," Irish, a sea battle), and O'Muirchu (muircu, Irish, a sea warrior), etc.
108. Dunsliabh: his son.
109. Donoch: his son.
110. Donal Ruadh: his son.
111. Donal Ban (bawn): his son.

112. Dermod: his son.
113. Donoch: his son.
114. Donoch Oge: his son.
115. Cathal: his son.
116. Murtagh: his son.
117. Phelim: his son.
118. Donal: his son.
119. Eimin: his son.
120. Murtagh: his son; 1460.
121. Teige, of Tobberlimnich: his son.
122. Art: his son.
123. Donal Mor: his son.
124. Art: his son.
125. Donal: his son.

The Murphy family proper begins with Seicne. O'Hart has begun with 100 so as to connect with the O'Dowling family.

ARMORIAL BEARINGS OF THE FAMILY.

Heraldry is an art of comparatively recent origin. The first treatise upon the subject, in England, was written in the time of Henry III and its origin and development covers the period of the reign of Henry III and the three Edwards. The source of armorial bearings, which afterwards obtained a wide popularity, seems to have been in the seal which was used as early as the eleventh century. Many of the figures appearing formerly on seals afterward appeared upon the shields and breast-plates of the knights and upon the trappings of their horses.

The diversion of the tournament brought armorial bearings to their greatest height of popularity.

At first they were not hereditary, the son adopting the bearings of his own choice, sometimes entirely distinct from those borne by the father. After bearings became popular among the barons, they granted the right to bear armorial crests to their retainers; and bearings were as numerous as the leading fighting men of the age.

Since the coat-of-arms does not date further back than the beginning of the thirteenth century, it was not until after the English had gained a footing in Ireland that the Irish clans and septs and individual leaders began to assume armorial bearings in imitation of the vogue on the continent and in England.

The crest of the Murphy family, decorating the cover of this book, cannot be traced to its origin, but is the well authenticated crest of the family.

THE SOCIAL POSITION OF THE MURPHY FAMILY IN THE EARLY AGES.

The clan of the Hy-Felimy, to which the Murphy family was attached, did not differ in organization or character from the other clans in Ireland. All of the clans were characterized by an intense tribal spirit, a feeling which has found expression in the English language in the word "clannishness."

The tuath or territory of the rī or king is divided into septs. The lands of a sept (fine) consisted of the estate in severalty of the lords' flatha and of the farand duthig or common lands of the sept. About the home of the lords' flatha, which were always fortified residences, lived his poor, who had right of domicile upon the land which he owned in severalty. These dependents consisted of estate cottiers, swineherds, cutters and the poorer servile classes generally. These dependents, after the third generation in the service of the lord or flaith, acquired a right of domicile on his land and lived there in small hamlets on the mountains and poorer lands of the estate. Beside these lived a queer population of slaves, horseboys, mercenaries, fugitives from justice and broken men of other clans who sought asylum on his estate. The common lands were let to fuidirs, some of whom grazed the land with their own cattle, others received both land and cattle from the flaith. These fuidirs had no rights in the clan or sept. They lived in scattered homesteads. Some of them were actual serfs and others tenants of will. The flaith was responsible before the law for all the acts of this servile population and he received compensation when they were killed or plundered. The members of the sept (fine) proper had a right to build a house on the ferand duthig or common lands of the sept, the amount of land which each might inclose being dependent upon his rank or wealth, and the clansmen usually occupied isolated cabins or homesteads, only occasionally being grouped in hamlets. Clansmen who possessed twenty-one cows and upwards were airig, that is, they had the franchise. They might give bail, act as witnesses and perform other functions of citizens of the present day. When one of the airig died, his estate was frequently held in common by his family in order that one member of the family retain the rights appertaining to the airig.

Upon one member of the clan, generally the wealthy members, were imposed the duty of affording hospitality to travelers who were entitled to free quarters from the clan. This individual was called a briugu. This man acted as a rural magistrate of the clan meetings, for the election of the rī took place at his house. All members of the clan were obliged to pay a tribute to the rī.

The professions of ecna, which included law and medicine, and filadecht or divination, which in Christian times was that of the bards or rhymesters, were considered noble callings, and there were a number of schools for instruction in these professions, which frequently moved about the territory of the clan. The ollam bretheman or chief of a law school was the chief brehon or judge of his tuath. The liag or medical man had his apprentice and treated his surgical patients in his own house. The harper, also the cerd, or artist in metal, were given free land and gave all their skill and the product of their labor as tribute for their support to the chief.

Popular assemblies were held in the open air: the methel flatha was the gathering of the vassals of a lord to reap his corn, clear his roads, etc. The meeting of the sept or fine was called for various purposes, as the assessment of blood fines when one of the sept was killed. The clan also had its gathering to deliberate on important questions, such as peace and war, and at these meetings the aire or fully qualified clansmen had a voice. The most popular of all assemblies was the oenach or fair, which had the character of a national assembly. This was summoned by the rī. At this assembly occurred the promulgation of laws, the rehearsal of pedigrees, the recitation of tales, poetry, musical contests were held, also exhibitions of artists in metal, etc., and prizes were awarded to professional classes. Popular sports, such as horse-racing and wrestling, took place, and, in addition, the barter of all kinds of wares was carried on. These fairs, both in Pagan and Christian times, were usually opened and closed with religious ceremonies. The women and men assembled in separate gatherings, and no men were permitted to enter the domain of the women under pain of death. Foreign traders were present with their wares, which they exchanged for native products, especially for the coarse woolen goods, which in the early centuries were celebrated for their quality upon the continent.

NATIVE ATTIRE.

The men wore a loose shirt, generally of woolen cloth, reaching a little below the knees, known as the lenn. This garment was of different colors, checkered, spotted and colored in various ways, each clan having apparently special colors. The rank of the wearer was indicated by the number of colors in the dress. The lenna of the wealthy flatha were embroidered and sometimes fringed with costly material, gold fringe being sometimes mentioned. Over the lenn a closely fitting tunic, reaching to the hips, was worn. This was called the inar and it was bound around the waist by a criss, a girdle or scarf, which in the case of the men was frequently presented by a woman. The inar was opened at the breast so as to show off the embroidery of the lenn. Over the left shoulder, and fastened with a brooch, hung a brat, like the Scotch plaid, only the brooches were often of beautiful workmanship, and numerous examples exhibiting great variety of design are now preserved in museums. The legs were bare, or were covered by a kind of legging or hose fastened by thongs. The feet, if not entirely naked, were incased with shoes of rawhide, also fastened with thongs. The only difference between the dress of the men and women was that the lenn of the women reached nearly to the ankles. The clansmen wore their hair long and prided themselves upon its curling into ringlets. They sometimes fastened it at the back, binding it up and confining it by an ornament of bronze, silver or gold. The women also wore their hair long and braided it into tresses. The beard was worn long and was carefully cultivated and was often braided into tresses. Men and women alike were very fond of ornaments. They covered their fingers with rings and their arms with bracelets, and sometimes rings of gold were worn about the neck. Other women of rank wore finger rings, bracelets, earrings and a lan, or crescent-shaped piece of gold, on the front of the head from which hung behind a veil. Ladies also had carved combs and ornamental work boxes, and they dyed their eyebrows and eyelashes black with the juice of a berry, and it was a common custom to tint the nails crimson.

The men of the servile classes did not wear the lenn. They were attired in braccae or breeches reaching to the ankles, the upper part of the body being covered with a short coat without sleeves. In winter all classes wore a long coat or cloak with a cochull or hood. These coats were made of brown frieze of excellent quality and were used also in Gaul and became popular in the city of Rome. The name cowl, in English and all its cognate forms in other languages, is derived from the Gaulish word corresponding to the Irish cochull. The principal weapon of the soldiers was a pike or lance with a very long handle. Some were armed with a short sword suspended by a belt across the shoulders and a shield.

MARRIAGE.

Among all the tribal communities the wealth of the contracting parties constituted the primary element of a legitimate marriage. If the bridegroom was the son of a flaith and the bride the daughter of a cowaire, the former contributed one-third and the latter two-thirds to the marriage portion. In this kind of marriage, the husband and wife had equal rights over the joint property. The wife of equal rank was the chief wife in Pagan times, and where these conditions were not fulfilled, the woman occupied an inferior position and might have another woman placed over her as principal wife. It was long after the establishment of Christianity that the clansmen were persuaded to give up the custom of plural wives. Besides the plurality of wives, there were many female slaves in the home of the flaith.

FOOD.

Food was simple, as was also the table service, oaten bread, cheese, curds, milk, butter and the flesh of all domestic animals, fresh and salted, were served to the clansmen. The chief drink was ale, which only the flatha had the right to brew, but this ale was distributed freely to the vassals and retainers on Sundays. An old Irish aphorism reads, " for he is not a lawful flaith who does not distribute ale on Sunday."

OCCUPATIONS.

The Irish were chiefly a pastoral people. After their grain was sold, they drove their herds and flocks to the mountains, where such existed, and spent the summer there, returning in autumn to reap their grain and to seek the shelter of their winter residence. If the tuath was on the coast, the clansmen appeared to have spent the summer there. The chase occupied much of the time of the freemen in summer, not only as a source of enjoyment, but the hunting of wolves, which were numerous, was a necessity. For this purpose they bred dogs, known as wolfhounds, of great strength, swiftness and sagacity, which were much admired by the Romans.

BIOGRAPHIES.

We have added to this genealogical history of the Murphy family some short biographical sketches of those of the name who have attained prominence and positions of honor in various walks of life. The list is necessarily only a partial one, as there is no source to which an investigator in a matter of this character can go to find a complete list of those of the name who by their achievements deserve mention in treating of the name. Greatness is not classified according to surnames, so that it is only where occasionally a person of the name towers above his fellowmen in the same fields of endeavor that he is discovered and becomes available for biographical treatment.

The reader will probably know of many of the name who should have been included in these biographical sketches, whose life history did not come within the scope of the publisher's information..

ARCHIBALD D. MURPHY.

Archibald DeBow Murphy, a prominent statesman in North Carolina in the early part of the nineteenth century, was born in Milton, Caswell County, that state, in 1767, son of Col. Archibald Murphy. Entering the University of North Carolina in 1795, he graduated from there two years later with high honors. Through the friendship of one of the examining judges, he was admitted to the bar, studying afterwards under William Duffy of Hillsboro. He was senator in the general assembly from 1812-18, and was chairman of the board of internal improvements, 1818-23. His papers on the public policy of the transportation by canals to join the sounds on the seaboard were full of valuable data and suggestions, and were considered the equal, if not better than like works of DeWitt Clinton and J. C. Calhoun. He was a man far ahead of his time in the matter of public education, recommending state aid for public schools, and for the better equipment of the state university.

In 1812 the general assembly elected him a judge of the superior court and, by appointment of the governor, he presided in the supreme court in several cases. In 1820 he resigned his seat on the bench, practicing in Hillsboro. From 1802 to 1832 he was a trustee of the University of North Carolina, and by his efforts helped considerably to improve it as a seat of learning.

He was a great lover and admirer of his native state, and planned an exhaustive history of its soil, climate, legislation, civil institutions, literature and so forth in 1821, and completed an immense amount of data, both at home and from the state paper office, London. In 1826 he was granted authority by the general assembly to raise by lottery a sum sufficient for the publication of his work. With only a few chapters on Indian tribes completed, fortune frowned upon him. Through unwise speculation and his health failing him, he was obliged to abandon the work.

His most prominent literary achievements were: A Memoir of Improvements Contemplated and the Finances and Resources of the State (1819), An Ovation before the University of North Carolina (1827), Reports of Cases in the Supreme Court of North Carolina (1804-19), 1826.

He died in Hillsboro, N. C., February 3, 1832.

ARTHUR MURPHY.

Arthur Murphy, actor and dramatic author, was born in Elphins, in the county of Roscommon, December 27, 1730. He was the son of a Dublin merchant. In 1736 he was sent to his aunt at Boulogne, and later (1740) was placed by her in St. Omer's. Here he was known by the name of Arthur French, it being necessary in those days for Irish-Catholic boys to assume false names to avoid the penalties incurred for being educated abroad. At the same time, education at home was forbidden them except in Protestant schools.

He passed with credit through all his studies and returned to Ireland, entering his uncle's country house in the city of Cork. He applied himself to law for a couple of years, but tiring of this for the time being, took a position in the banking house of Alderman Ironsides in the city of London.

It was in London that he entered the field of literature, publishing the "Gray's Inn Journal," a periodical of the style of the "Spectator." He continued at this for two years, in the mean time appearing on the stage in the character of Othello. This later venture proved a failure.

He next attempted dramatic authorship. His "The Apprentice" brought him nearly eight hundred pounds, and enabled him to pursue his legal studies. His connection with the stage, however, proved an obstacle to his admittance to the bar, until Lord Mansfield used his influence in his behalf. Murphy proved more of a success as a dramatic author than as a lawyer.

His "The Upholsterer," 1758; "The Way to Keep Him," 1760; "All in the Wrong," 1761; "The Grecian Daughter," 1772, and "Know Your Own Mind," in 1777, proved very successful, and brought their author both fame and wealth.

Murphy, in later years, produced the first biography of Fielding, and also wrote an essay on the life and genius of Johnson, and a translation of Sallust and Tacitus. Macaulay says of him: "Murphy was supposed to understand the temper and the wit of his time as well as any man." Hazlitt also spoke in complimentary terms of his work, especially praising his plays of "All in the Wrong" and "Know Your Own Mind."

Murphy is described as having been tall and the embodiment of grace, fair complexion, eyes bright, and while outwardly very sedate, with an undercurrent of mirth in his nature. He fell into poor circumstances in his later days, owing to his liberality and poor business management. He was relieved, however, by his appointment as commissioner of bankrupts, and a civil list pension of two hundred pounds per annum. He also inherited some real estate and shares by the death of a relative in the West Indies.

Arthur Murphy died at his lodging-house in Knights-Bridge, London, attended by his landlady and an Irish servant girl, who were his constant and devoted attendants. He died repeating the lines of Pope:

> "Taught half by reason, half by mere decay,
> To welcome death, and calmly pass away."

DENIS BROWNELL MURPHY.

Denis Brownell Murphy was a native of Dublin. He was a strong patriot and was closely connected with the leaders in the '98 movement. He was a miniature painter by profession and removed to England in 1799 for professional reasons. He settled first in Whitehaven and later in Newcastle on Tyne, but in 1802 came to London, settling in Hanwell.

Some of Murphy's work attracted the attention of Princess Charlotte, and, as a result, he was appointed painter in ordinary to her royal highness. He copied some of Lely's famous beauties, then at Windsor Castle, but later removed to Hampton Court and, at the princess' command, arranged to copy some of these in series, including other famous beauties of the day. He had other appointments assigned him during his stay at Windsor. His work was daily inspected and approved by the royal family.

Before the "Beauty Series" was completed the princess died, thus putting an end to Murphy's connection with the court. On the completion of the work, the pictures were sent to Prince Leopold, with the claim for payment, but, to the painter's sore disappointment, were returned and the agreement made with the late princess repudiated.

Sir Gerard Noel, a friend of Murphy, purchased them later, however, and it was decided to make use of them by having them engraved as a series, with illustrative text from the pen of Murphy's daughter, Mrs. Ann Brownell Jamieson, a well-known writer on art. The work was successfully completed in 1833, under the title of "Beauties of the Court of Charles II."

Murphy frequently exhibited miniatures in ivory or enamel at the Royal Academy, and while not attracting any great attention, the merit of the work was acknowledged by all.

He died in 1842 at the home of his daughter, Ann Brownell Jamieson.

DOMINICK EDWARD MURPHY.

Dominick Edward Murphy, R. C., Archbishop of Dublin, belonged to the old Wexford stock. The family settled in the county of Carlow. On the recommendation of James II, he was appointed bishop of Kildare and Leighlin on September 15, 1715, and was consecrated by Edmund Byrne December 18th of that year by a special brief dated September of that same year. He was consecrated January, 1725, with the dispensation to perform all the archiepiscopal within the pallium.

On November 25th, he applied for and was granted a coadjutor on February 13, 1729. The historian of Kildare paid special tribute to Bishop Murphy in his dedication to the Rev. Dr. Magee of Stradvally, a descendant of the Murphy family, speaking of his Eminence as one of the noblest of bishops-elect, that Kildare and Leighlin had just reason to be proud of.

SIR FRANCIS MURPHY.

Sir Francis Murphy, first speaker of the legislative assembly of Victoria, Australia, was born in the city of Cork in 1809. He was the son of Francis D. Murphy, who was superintendent of the transportation of convicts from Ireland to Australia. He received his early education in the city of Cork, and later studied medicine in Trinity College, Dublin, taking his diploma eventually in the College of Surgeons, London.

On the advice of his father, who evidently saw good possibilities for the future in Australia, he proceeded to that country, landing at Sydney in 1836. He was shortly afterward placed on the staff of colonial surgeons as surgeon for Bungonia, Argyle County. After three years, he resigned his position and moved to Port Philip, taking up about fifty thousand acres of land in the Beechwood district. He was one of the chief grain-growers in the country at that time.

When Victoria separated from New South Wales, in 1851, Murphy became a speaker for the Murray District in the legislative council, afterwards becoming chairman of committees. He moved to Melbourne in 1852 to more fully devote himself to politics. He was active in promoting legislation for the prevention of diseases in sheep. His ideas of state aid in education were put into effect in later years. In many ways he was far ahead of his time.

Dr. Murphy was closely identified with the early development of Australia, having served on the road board as chairman; was re-elected from the Murray District, and served as chairman of committees for periods from 1853 to 1858.

When the constitution bill was being debated, Murphy showed marked judgment and moderation. On the inauguration of an elective legislature, in 1856, Murphy again entered the assembly for the Murray District. He was elected for six consecutive times as speaker of the assembly, holding the post through the stormy times of McCollough's contests with the upper chamber. In the election of 1871, Murphy was defeated in the contest for Grenville, which he had represented since 1865.

In 1872, Murphy was elected by the Eastern Province to a seat in the upper house, which he held for four years, but did not take any active part in its discussions. He retired to private life in 1877.

In 1856, the house passed an act to present him with the sum of three thousand pounds in consideration for his services as speaker for fourteen years. He visited England in 1878, residing there for several years.

Murphy was opposed to further transportation to Australia, and, in 1863, was chairman of a league organized against it. He served as a member of the commission of the Burke and Wills expedition, was chairman of the National Bank of Australia, and director of several other companies.

His death occurred March 30, 1891, at his residence, St. Kilda Road, Melbourne. He left six daughters and three sons, one of whom was a member of the legislative assembly of Queensland.

FRANCIS STACK MURPHY.

Francis Stack Murphy, sergeant-at-law, was born at Cork in 1810, son of Jeremiah Murphy, a rich merchant of that city, and nephew of John Murphy, who was Roman Catholic bishop of Cork from 1815 to 1847. He was educated at Clongoeswood College, County Kildare, and at Trinity College, Dublin, graduating from the latter B.A. in 1829 and M.A. in 1832. After studying law in London for one year, he was admitted to the bar.

He was a contributor to "Frazer's Magazine" and was considered an excellent classical scholar. Being an early pupil of the Rev. Francis Mahoney (Father Prout) in Ireland, the friendship was renewed in London. He was the original of "Frank Creswell" of "Fernival's Inn" in the Prout Papers. He is said to have been responsible for most of Mahoney's Greek and Latin verses.

He was returned as M.P. from Cork in 1837, retaining his seat until 1843, when, appointed sergeant-at-law and commissioner of bankruptcy in Dublin, he resigned.

Murphy was noted as a very clever and witty lawyer. Many of his witty sayings and repartees are recorded in Duffy's "League of North and South" and in Sargeant Robinson's "Bench and Bar." He wrote, in conjunction with Edward T. Hurlstone of London, "A Report on Cases and determinings in the Court of Exchequer in 1836-37," this being the only work which bears his name. Murphy's picture is in the group of MacLise's famous portraits of the Fraserians.

He died June 16, 1860.

JOHN MURPHY, D.D.

John Murphy, a Catholic clergyman, born in Tincurry, County Wexford, belonged to the oldest Wexford stock of his name. He gained world-wide renown through his leadership of the rebel forces in the Rebellion of '98. He studied at Seville, Spain, taking orders there and, returning to Ireland in 1785, was made parish priest of Boularogue. He joined with several other clergymen in 1797 in swearing allegiance to the government in order to avert the proclamation of their parishes. After having his patience severely tried by the yeomanry and by the burning of his chapel, he took to the field at the head of a large body of pikemen. He defeated a large body of troops at Oulart and next day took Camolin and Enniscorthy, afterward camping on Vinegar Hill. While some writers, such as Froude and Musgrave (both very narrow in their views), have attempted to cast odium on the discipline and deportment of the forces under Father Murphy, their actions have been ably defended by Dr. Madden. General Lake, with a force of thirty thousand men, was despatched against Father Murphy and his followers, and while the Irish fought with their usual courage against such overwhelming numbers, the battle terminated with the inevitable result.

After making two more ineffectual stands at Arklow and Kilkenny, Dr. Murphy was finally captured, and was executed on June 26, 1798.

HON. FRANKLIN MURPHY

FRANKLIN MURPHY.

Franklin Murphy, governor of New Jersey, is a descendant of Wm. H. and Abbey Murphy, who settled in Connecticut in 1756.

He served for three years in the 13th New Jersey Volunteers, rising from private through bravery and meritorious conduct to the rank of first lieutenant. After the war, he engaged in the business of varnish manufacturing under the name of Murphy & Co. He was chairman of the Republican state committee from 1892 to 1900 and was United States commissioner to the Paris Exposition in 1900. He has long been identified with the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution and was elected president-general of that organization in 1899. He is also a member of the military order of the Loyal Legion and of the Society of Colonial Wars. He was twice elected governor of New Jersey, in 1901 and 1904, and is very popular.

EDWARD MURPHY.

Edward Murphy, senator, was born in Troy, N. Y., on December 15, 1836. His father emigrated from Ireland, settling in Troy in 1829 and establishing a brewery there in 1838. Edward attended the local schools, after which he entered St. John's College, Fordham, N. Y., graduating in 1857. He entered in business with his father after leaving college. On his father's retirement, he became vice-president and treasurer of the newly-constructed firm, which was known as the Kennedy & Murphy Malting Co. He has held several municipal positions; was alderman, 1874-79, and member of the Democratic state committee, 1882-95.

He was manager and principal stockholder on the "Troy Press," 1887-89; vice-president of the Manufacturers' National Bank, and president of the Troy Gas Co. He was delegate to the Democratic conventions of 1880, 1884, 1888, 1896 and 1898, and United States senator from New York, 1893-99. While in the senate he served as chairman of the committee on relations with Canada.

FRANCIS MURPHY.

Francis Murphy, first Roman Catholic bishop of Australia, was born at Navan, County Meath, Ireland, May 20, 1795. After graduating at the seminary in his native town, he proceeded, at the age of twenty, to Maynooth, where he graduated with honors.

He was ordained in 1826 by the Rev. Dr. Murray, archbishop of Dublin. After serving in the capacity of missioner for some years in Yorkshire, England, he was transferred to St. Ann's, Liverpool, in 1829.

He went to New South Wales in 1838 with Dr. Ullathorne, and, on the latter's recall to England, succeeded him as vicar-general of Australia. He was consecrated on September 8, 1838, in St. Mary's Cathedral, Sydney, bishop of the newly established See of Adelaide, being the first bishop consecrated in Australia.

He came to his new diocese, which at that time contained only fifteen hundred Catholics, with only one hundred and fifty pounds, which had been subscribed in Sydney. He was obliged to hold services in a store until his sole assistant and faithful and energetic friend, Michael Ryan, obtained a site for and erected a church in West Terrace. In 1851 the gold fever caused the dispersion of the greater part of the congregation, and it looked as if some of the churches would have to be temporarily closed. But his good friend, Michael Ryan, again came to the rescue. Visiting the gold fields, Ryan collected enough money from the miners to meet all expenses.

After affairs had assumed a normal condition and the excitement as a result of the discovery of gold had somewhat subsided, he commenced the erection of a cathedral in Victoria Street, but did not live to see it finished. In twenty years, however, he had succeeded in establishing twenty churches, attended by thirteen priests.

The ability displayed in the management of his diocese won him general esteem. He was highly thought of by all classes, irrespective of creed. He died of consumption at West Terrace, Adelaide, May 26, 1858, and was buried in the precincts of the cathedral.

JOHN MURPHY.

John Murphy, publisher, was born in Omah, Ireland, March 12th, 1812. When ten years of age, his parents emigrated to the United States, settling in New Castle, Del., where John went to school. Two years later he served as clerk in a grocery store, and afterwards went to Philadelphia and became a printer's apprentice, where he remained from 1828 to 1833. He proceeded to Baltimore, Md., where he engaged in business for himself, combining publishing with his printing business. He published the United States Catholic Magazine, edited by Fathers White and Spaulding (1842-49), the Metropolitan Magazine (1853-59), and the Proceedings of the Maryland Historical Society, for over twenty-five years. He published a translation of the Definition of the Dogma of the Immaculate Conception (1855), Proceedings of the Plenary Council of Baltimore (1866). He received for the first a gold medal from Pope Pious IX, and for the second the honorary title of Printer to the Pope, a distinction never before accorded the resident of an English-speaking country. He published the works of Cardinal Gibbons and of Archbishop Spaulding.

On June 15, 1852, he married Margaret O'Donahue. He was an early member of the Maryland Historical Society. His death occurred at Baltimore, Md., May 27, 1880.

JOHN MURPHY.

John Murphy, governor of Alabama, was born in Robeson County, N. C., in 1776. He was the son of Neil Murphy and grandson of Murdoch Murphy, who emigrated from Scotland with his family.

Moving to South Carolina, he taught school, meantime preparing himself for college. He graduated from the University of South Carolina in 1808. Later he became trustee of the university, serving from 1809 to 1818. He removed to Monroe County, Ala., in 1818, and was instrumental in framing the state constitution in 1819. Though admitted to the bar, he retired from practice, giving his attention to his plantations. He was a member of the legislature in 1820, representing Monroe County; two years later was state senator, finally becoming governor of Alabama in 1825-29. He was defeated as Union candidate for representative and was Union Democratic representative in the Twenty-third Congress, 1833-35.

He was married to a daughter of Robert Hails of South Carolina, and secondly, to Mrs. Carter, sister of Col. John Darrington. He died September 1, 1841.

JAMES GRACEY MURPHY.

James Gracey Murphy, clergyman and author, was born in the parish of Comber, County Down, Ireland, January 12, 1808. He was educated at the Royal Academical Institution at Belfast and Trinity College, Dublin. On taking orders, he became minister at Ballychannon, remaining there from 1836 to 1841, when he was made headmaster of classics at the Belfast Academical Institution, where he served for five years. He became professor of Hebrew at the Theological Institution, Belfast, in 1847, a position he retained until 1888, when he was retired at his own request.

Among his principal literary works were a Latin Grammar (1857), a Hebrew Grammar (1857), "The Human Mind" (1873), "Commentaries on Genesis" (1864), "Revelations" (1882), and "Sacrifice in Scripture" (1889).

JAMES CAVANAGH MURPHY.

James Cavanagh Murphy, architect and antiquarian, was born in 1760, at Black Rock, near Cork, of humble parents. In his youth he learned the trade of bricklayer. He early showed a taste for drawing, and went to Dublin to study. His name appears on the rolls of the drawing-school of the Dublin Society, in 1775, as working in chalk, crayons and miniature.

He was consulted as to the addition to the House of Commons. In 1788, he was commissioned by Wm. Burton Sonyngham to make a drawing for him of the great Dominican church and monastery of Bathala in Portugal.

In the year 1802 he went to Cadiz, where he spent seven years studying Moorish architecture. He was preparing a work on Eastern Architecture, and left several notes, but died in 1814, before the work was completed.

In the library of the Royal Institute of British Architects is a large folio of his drawings of arabesque ornaments. At his death he left an estate of five thousand pounds, which was administered by his sister Hannah, wife of Bernard McNamara.

Among his published works are "Plans, Elevations, Sections and Views of the Church of Bathala," a German translation of "The Discourse on Gothic Architecture," "Travels in Portugal, General View of the State of Portugal, and Arabian Antiquities of Spain."

Mr. Murphy took out a patent in 1813 for a method of preserving timber and other substances.

JOHN MURPHY, ENGRAVER.

John Murphy, engraver, was born in Ireland in 1780. He moved to London, where he practiced engraving. His plates, while not numerous, show masterly treatment, and are singularly brilliant. His subjects were taken principally from contemporary English painters and from the old masters. He also did some work from old portraits.

His work includes "A Tiger," after Northcote; "Jael and Sisera," after the same painter; "A Tigress," after Stubbs; "Portrait of The Duke of Portland," after Reynolds; "George the Third, and His Family," after T. Stothard; "Christ Appearing to Magdalen," after P. Da Cortona; and "The Cyclops at Their Forge."

He died at the age of forty years.

CHARLES FRANCIS MURPHY.

Charles Francis Murphy was born in New York City, June 20, 1858. He is the son of Charles and Mary (Prendergast) Murphy. He attended school but a short time, being compelled to earn his own living while still a lad. His great strength and courage made him a leader of the youths of his own age, and he soon acquired fame as the best athlete in his district.

At the age of seventeen he organized the "Sylvan Club," in which, at that early age, he showed marks of leadership, which were later more fully manifested at the head of the greatest political organization in the world. When he had saved five hundred dollars from his earnings he started in business for himself. By this time the "Sylvan

HON. CHAS. FRANCIS MURPHY

Club" had grown to be a factor in New York City politics, and here the men of the neighborhood congregated to talk over the affairs of the day.

Murphy's secretiveness earned for him the nickname of "Silent Charlie," but the trait that was most marked in him was his generosity to the church and to the poor. His popularity was due to this fact, as well as to his loyalty to his friends, and the strictness of his personal habits.

At the age of thirty-two he was well established in business, and continued to grow in popularity; and, owing to his popularity, he rapidly advanced in political leadership. In 1892, Edward Hagan, the Tammany district leader, who owed his position as a politician to Murphy, died, and Murphy became his successor. After this Murphy's rise in politics was rapid, and when, in 1898, Robert H. Van Wyck was elected mayor, he appointed Mr. Murphy dock commissioner. Upon the retirement of Richard Croker, in 1902, he became the official leader of Tammany Hall. It was here that he showed his remarkable ability as a leader by uniting the Independent Democratic party with the Tammany men.

The administration of Mayor Low necessitated the selection of a strong and conservative man as standard-bearer of the Democratic party. For this reason George B. McClellan was nominated and elected in 1903, owing principally to Mr. Murphy's personal activity.

JOHN B. MURPHY, M.D.

John B. Murphy, physician, was born at Appleton, Wis., December 21, 1857. His parents, Michael P. and Anna Grimes Murphy, emigrated to this country from Ireland in 1848. After receiving an education in his native town, he entered the Rush Medical College and received his degree in 1879. Shortly after his graduation he began practicing as intern of the Cook County Hospital. For two years he practiced his profession in Chicago, and, at the end of that time, wishing to further perfect himself by study and practice in foreign countries, he visited Berlin, Munich, and Heidelberg.

In 1848 he returned to Chicago and accepted a professorship of surgery and clinical surgery in the Rush Medical School; also a professorship in surgery in the Post-Graduate Medical School of Chicago. He has been attending physician to the Cook County Hospital since 1884. He is also attending surgeon to Mercy Hospital, ex-president of the medical staff of the Cook County Hospital, ex-president of the Chicago Surgical Society, vice-president of the National Association of Railway Surgeons, consulting surgeon at the Alexian Brothers Hospital, and president of the Chicago Medical Society. In addition to these, Dr. Murphy is a life member of the Deutsche Gesellschaft Fur Chururgie, Berlin, Germany, member of the Surgical Society of Paris, member of the Twelfth International Medical College of Moscow, and fellow of the American Surgical Association.

Dr. Murphy is the author of many medical writings, among which are "Gunshot Wounds of the Abdomen" and "Actinomycosis Hominis." He is also famous for his book illustrating the application of the Anastomosis Button, an invention of his own, which lessens the dangers of addominal operations. He has likewise compiled a report of two thousand operations for appendicitis, and is the author of "Intestinal Surgery" and "Year Book of Surgery." His invention of the Anastomosis Button, known as the "Murphy Button," is recognized by surgeons as an important achievement in surgery.

He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Illinois State Medical Society, the Chicago Pathological Society, and the Pan-American Medical Association. He is a man of great ability, remarkable intellectual attainments, and exceptional skill in the medical profession, and is especially famed for his surgical treatises. The latest honor conferred upon him was the presentation, in 1902, of a Laetere Gold Medal by the University of Notre Dame, in acknowledgment of his high standing in the medical profession.

TIMOTHY MURPHY.

Timothy Murphy was born in Manhattanville, N. Y., March 10, 1844. At the age of fifteen, he removed to Jacksonville, Fla. He learned the machinist trade, and, as the Civil War closed the shops in Jacksonville, he was forced to go to Savannah, Ga. In Savannah he entered the employ of the Georgia Central Railroad Company as an expert machinist and mechanical engineer. In 1875 he returned to Jacksonville and opened a machine shop and foundry. From this small beginning, his business increased rapidly, until he built up the most extensive iron and brass foundry in the South.

The name of Timothy Murphy and his manufactured goods are known throughout the country. In his employ were trained some of the leading engineers and machinists of that section, and, owing to the special interest shown them by Mr. Murphy, he was looked upon as a benefactor. Because of his extensive and constantly growing business, he has repeatedly declined public office, with the exception of his service for one term as treasurer of Duval County.

Mr. Murphy is one of the solid citizens of his city, and in everything pertaining to the interests or advancement of Jacksonville, or to the betterment of her citizens, he can always be relied upon as an able helper.

JEREMIAH MURPHY.

Jeremiah Murphy, representative, was the son of Timothy and Jerusha Murphy. He was born at Lowell, Mass., February 19, 1835. He received his early education in the public schools of Boston, Mass., and, in 1849, moved with his parents to Fond du Lac, Wis. Three years later they went to Iowa. He graduated from the State University of Iowa in 1857, and was admitted to the bar in 1858. He practiced law in Meringo from 1858 to 1867, and in Davenport from 1867 to 1883. He was delegate to the Democratic national convention from 1864 to 1868, state senator from 1874 to 1878, and served as mayor of Davenport from 1873 to 1879. He was Democratic representative from the second Iowa district in the forty-eighth and forty-ninth congresses, and to his unceasing efforts was due the appropriation for the Hennepin canal, which connects Lake Erie with the Mississippi River. He died at Washington, D. C., December 11, 1893.

JOHN J. MURPHY.

John J. Murphy, scholar and educator, was born in the County Kildare, Ireland, January 17, 1844. He graduated from Carlow College in 1862, and immediately entered Maynooth College, where he studied for the priesthood. He came to the United States in 1866, entering the Society of Jesus. He completed his theological course in Woodstock, Md., and was instructor at Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass., at Georgetown College, D. C., at Frederick, Md., at Woodstock, Md., and was rector of Holy Trinity Church, Georgetown, D. C. He served as president of Georgetown College and of St. Francis Xavier College, New York, N. Y.

He became a member of the staff of the Messenger of the Sacred Heart, and was a contributor to the "Georgetown College Journal." He died in Georgetown, D. C., March 4, 1892.

ISAAC MURPHY.

Isaac Murphy, governor of Arkansas, was born near Pittsburgh in 1802. He was the son of Hugh and Jane Murphy. He moved to Tennessee, teaching school in Montgomery County from 1829-34. In 1830 he married Angelina A. Lockhart. Later, in 1834, he moved to Fayette, Ark., becoming prominent in that part of the state on account of his work in the promotion of education. Having studied law, he was admitted to the bar in 1835. He engaged in civil engineering in connection with his law practice. From 1848 to 1849 he was representative to the state legislature. He went to California in 1849, remaining there five years, returning to Arkansas in 1854, where he settled in Huntsville. He was Union delegate to the Arkansas secession convention in 1861. Mr. Murphy became noted for his attitude in standing out against secession, he being the only delegate voting against it. He enlisted in the Union army in April, 1862, serving on the staff of General Curtis, and took part in the capture of Little Rock, Ark., on September 10, 1863. He became provisional governor in January and elective governor of Arkansas in March, 1864, serving until 1868. His record as governor stands prominent in the history of Arkansas. He not only paid the expenses of his administration, but turned into the state treasury $270,000 at the close of his term of office.

His death occurred in Huntsville, Ark., September 8, 1882.

JAMES MURPHY.

James Murphy, poet and novelist, was born in Glynn, County Carlow, in 1839. He was appointed principal of the public schools in Bray, a famous watering-place near Dublin, in 1860. He afterward became town clerk and chairman of the municipal board of commissioners, finally resigning these to accept the professorship of mathematics in St. Gall's Catholic University, Dublin. Mr. Murphy's first novel, "The Cross of Glencarrig," at once stamped him as a writer of extraordinary merit. He later wrote "The Shadow on the Scaffold," "The Forge of Clohogue," "Convict No. 25," "The House on the Rath," "Hugh Roach, the Ribbonman," "The Shan Van Vocht," "The Fortunes of Maurice O'Donnell," and "The Haunted Church."

His poetry is contained in "The Lays and Legends of Ireland," a volume of some two hundred pages. In this volume is found "The Advent of the Milesians," one of his strongest poems. This poem is published in full here, chiefly on account of its harmonious bearing on the rest of the work, and because of its historical and richly national characteristics.

THE ADVENT OF THE MILESIANS.

The summer sun is streaming o'er many a galley tall,
Where eastern wave, by Syrian coast, builds up of foam a wall;
And bright the golden streak of rays that marks the vessels' track,
And bright the sheen of summer light the parted wave gives back.

But brighter far the lines of light from waven swords that gleam,
And brighter still of high resolve in warrior eyes the beam:
As from the galley's sunlit decks into the temple's gloom
Pass armed hosts with glancing helms and wave of tossing plume!

The sacred shrine above them — the spreading sea before —
The silken sails, as yet unfurled, their waiting galleys bore —
In shrouding mist and silence — none dared to whisper then! —
Await the God of Destiny a thousand bearded men.

No arching roof or canopy o'erspreads the temple where Before the awful shrine of Fate the mustered warriors are —
In solemn, silent reverence the mystic words of fate
From the High-Priest of Prophesy the plumed chiefs await.

A leader stands before them, whose broad and ample breast
In mantling folds of purple cloth by kingly right is drest;
A head above the tallest, his helm, athrough the mist,
Beams bright as day with diamond and gleam of amethyst.

That sword he bears, in Babylon from royal hand he tore;
That golden circlet on his arm the regal Pharaoh wore;
The diamonds on his sword-hilt, that gleam like liquid fire,
Once graced the golden shrines above the idol-gods of Tyre.

A warrior he of warrior race, Assyria owned his sway;
His iron bands through Scythia tore his resistless way;
And women wailed in Egypt, and cities lay as lone
As Isis in the desert, when once his flag was flown.

But leave he must! The fabled isle, the ancient seer foretold
In burning words of prophesy — whose hills were throned in gold —
Whose streams were tuned in melody — whose shores with pearls were lined —
And where the perfumes of the East surcharged the summer wind —

Called him afar! He cannot stay! At night the golden beams
That flooded that fair island home, shone inward in his dreams;
At day nor eastern wave he saw, nor eastern land, nor sky —
Along the golden rim of heaven sought out that isle his eye.

And now, amid his followers, before the shrine he stands —
Before the unknown God that holds the future in His hands —
And a bright blessing prayeth he his followers for, and on
The island home, that fabled land, e'er yet his ships were gone.

The aged priest before them stands, the mystic reed in hand:
"Milesius! Heber! Heremon! Seek ye the fabled land?
My heart-strings rend at parting — with grief my breast is wrung —
But a priceless gift I give thee: — the Blessing of the Tongue!

"A tongue for men to pray in to listening gods on high,
A tongue whose ringing accents shall cheer the brave to die —
Meet, in the dark'ning even, when falls the night above,
For red-lipped maids in Eire to speak the words of love.

"A tongue wherein the Druid may worship at the oak,
A tongue wherewith magician may hidden spells evoke —
In airy mist at noonday shall her fair hills be drest,
Or golden light shall deck her at eve — at his behest.

"Its notes the flow shall rival of Eire's silver streams,
Breathe it at night — a benison falls on the sleeper's dreams!
And angels' speech of sorrow (for ruined souls) in bliss
Shall lose its tone of anguish when women cry in this!"

The chieftain frowned in anger: "Not gift like this," he said,
"Want we to stir the heart to love — to sorrow for the dead;
For the brave heart to conquer, and the bright blade to sway,
Shall win us women's love, I trow — let sorrow those who may.

"Hast thou no other blessing?" "Hush!" the aged seer replies,
"Than gleaming sword, or gallant heart, in this more power lies;
Swords rust and throbbing hearts grow still, but in this gift I give Thy princely name and glorious deeds and bright renown shall live.

"Its kindling words shall valor feed within thy children's breasts;
Its song shall prouder tribute be than heralds' gleaming crests;
Its strains shall make their swords outflash when dangers gather round;
And ever shall its clarion cheer o'er conquered foe resound.

"Its trumpet tones in battle hour shall point the lifted spear;
The battle-axe through surging foes shall make a pathway clear;
For victory won its song of joy shall grace the festive cup" —
The sword-blades in their jeweled sheaths came ringing swiftly up.

"But hand to hand unitedly — on this condition rests
The mystic charm of victory that in this blessing vests —
Your ranks must join; your arms must strike; your valiant hearts must know Nor treason nor disloyalty when dares your strength the foe:

"Else shall your paeans of victory be songs of woe instead;
Else shall the conquering feet of foes above your bravest tread;
Else shall — but no! — the perfumed breeze to bear you hence away
Swell in your sails — mine aged lips the rest forbear to say!"

He lifted high his trembling hands — the chieftains forward sprang
And, kneeling, with the clank of spears the marble pavement rang;
A glorious sunburst flashed athrough the temple's solemn glooms —
A thousand swords outflashed! — The air was swept with tossing plumes!

Uprose the bannered lances, like lines of tapered oaks;
Rang on the pave their sabres, like hammering forgemen's strokes;
A cheer arose! "The sunburst! The God of Fate," they cried,
"Our banner in the golden sky with golden light has dyed!

"Never to die that banner! Never that tongue to die,
Till the warring world is voiceless, till the sun dies in the sky;
Till the god-like gift of manhood dies out from heart and veins,
And on the breast of Eire no son of our race remains.

"To the golden shores of Eirinn! To her sun-lit hills!" the cry
In the mystic tongue, that now they spoke, on the swelling breeze rose high;
And the silken sails and the cedar masts that their tossing galleys bore,
On that eastern wave when the sun went down, threw a shadow nevermore.

HENRY CRUSE MURPHY.

Henry Cruse Murphy was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., July 5, 1810. He was the son of John Murphy and grandson of Timothy Murphy of Monmouth County, N. J. He graduated from Columbia College in 1830 and was admitted to the bar in 1833, entering into partnership with John A. Lott, under the firm name of Lott & Murphy, afterwards known as Lott, Murphy & Vanderbilt. He became city attorney and corporation council. He contributed to various newspapers and magazines, principal among them being "The North American Review," the "Democratic Review," and the "Brooklyn Advocate." He established the "Brooklyn Daily Eagle" in 1841, becoming its proprietor and editor later. He took a very active part in politics. He was elected mayor of Brooklyn, 1841-2, and was delegate to the state constitutional convention in 1846 and a representative to the twenty-eighth and thirtieth congresses.

In 1852, Mr. Murphy's name was mentioned in the National Democratic convention of that year as an available candidate for the presidency. He was appointed minister to the Hague under Buchanan's administration. On his return from abroad, he again became very active in politics from 1861 to 1873, and as delegate to the state constitutional convention, 1867-68. He organized the 159th New York Volunteers. He was the founder of the city library and of the Long Island Historical Society. He was connected with various business enterprises, among them being the East River Bridge Company and the Brooklyn, Flatbush and Coney Island Company, in each of which he served as president. He accumulated various works on American history. He published several works, among them being "Henry Hudson in Holland" (1859), "The Voyage of Verrayano" (1875), "The First Ministry of the Dutch Reformed Church in the United States." He died in Brooklyn, N. Y., December 21, 1882.

NATHAN OAKES MURPHY.*

Nathan Oakes Murphy, governor of Arizona, was born in Jefferson, Maine, October 14, 1849. He was the son of B. T. Murphy and grandson of John Murphy. He emigrated to Wisconsin when a young man, teaching school there for three years, and from there went to California. There he engaged in mining, railroad building and various mercantile enterprises. He settled in Prescott, Arizona, in 1883, where he conducted mining operations. He was married in 1884 to Sarah, daughter of G. W. Banghart of Prescott. In 1889 he was made secretary of Arizona Territory, and became governor in 1892. He was a delegate to the Republican national convention at Minneapolis, Minn., in 1892, and a delegate to the fifty-fourth congress, 1895-97. He was again elected territorial governor from 1898 to 1902. Died April, 1908.

PATRICK MURPHY.

Patrick Murphy was born in 1782. He attained considerable prominence through his authorship of the "Weather Almanack (on scientific principles, showing the state of the weather for every day of the year 1838), by P. Murphy, M.N.S., i. e., member of no society." For January 20th he had predicted very cold weather, with the lowest degree of winter temperature. On that day, true enough, the thermometer showed four degrees below zero, which was remarkably cold weather for the British Isles.

This circumstance gave Murphy considerable renown, and created an enormous demand for his almanack. It was said that the shop of his publishers, Messrs. Whittaker & Co., was thronged with purchasers, who were obliged to wait in line — so popular had the almanack become, while the winter of 1837 and '38 became known as Murphy's winter. The 1838 edition netted Mr. Murphy $15,000. A parody on a popular song, "Lesbia has a Beaming Eye," had been written, commencing "Murphy has a Weather Eye."

Murphy's other principal works were: "An Inquiry into Nature on the Cause of Miasmata," "Second Rudiments of the Primary Forces of Gravity," "Magnetism and Electricity in Their Agency on the Heavenly Bodies," "The Anatomy of the Seasons," "Weather Guide Book and Perpetual Companion to the Almanack," "Meteorology Considered in its Connection with Astronomy," "Climate and the Geological Distinction of Animals and Plants Equally as with the Seasons and Changes of the Weather."

He wrote two papers for the Society of Scienziati Italiana a Padua, of which he was elected a member. He also wrote "Weather Tables for the Year 1844 and Astronomical Aphorisms, or Theory of Nature, Founded on the Immutable Basis of Meteoric Action" (two editions).

His death occurred at his lodgings, Dorset St., St. Brides, London, December 1, 1847, at the age of sixty-five.

ROBERT MURPHY.

Robert Murphy, a noted mathematician, was born in 1806, in Mallow, County Cork, Ireland. He was the third of a family of seven children, and his father followed the dual occupation of shoemaker and parish clerk. At an early age Robert evinced remarkable traits of mathematical genius. When eleven years of age he was run over by a cart, and the result of his accident was an enforced confinement to bed for over a year. During this period he studied Euclid and algebra, and before he attained his thirteenth year, he proved himself an extraordinarily efficient mathematician. He subsequently continued his studies with phenomenal progress in a school kept by a Mr. Hopley at Mallow. At the age of eighteen he published a remarkable bit of study called "The Refutation of a Pamphlet, Written by the Reverend John Mackay, R. C. P.— Entitled 'A Method of Making a Cube Double a Cube, Founded on the Principle of Elementary Geometry.'" In this work, the young geometrician proved the principles of the elder student to be erroneous and the solution not yet obtained.

Convinced of his genius, some of his friends raised a subscription to send him to the university, and he began his collegiate career in October, 1825, in Grenville and Caius College, Cambridge. In 1829 he graduated B.A., coming out third wrangler.

In May, 1831, he was appointed dean of his college, an office which involved the regulation of chapel discipline. Unfortunately — and how often has this to be recorded of genius? — he fell into dissipated habits, and, in December, 1832, he left Cambridge in disgrace, his fellowship being put in sequestration for the benefit of his creditors.

After being at home in Ireland for a few years, he came to London, in 1836, to begin life anew as a teacher and writer, and so well redeemed himself that, in 1838, he was appointed examiner in mathematics and natural philosophy in the University of London.

He died March 12, 1843, at the untimely age of thirty-seven years, and has left many remarkable works as a legacy to posterity.

His friend, Augustus DeMorgan, states that he had true mathematical genius for invention, and that his works on the theory of equation and on electricity and his papers on the Cambridge transactions are all of high genius. He contributed to the "Cambridge Transactions" the following treatises: "General Properties of Definite Integrals," "On the Resolution of Algebraic Equations," "On the Inverse Method of Definite Integrals with Physical Applications," "On Elimination Between an Indefinite Number of Unknown Quantities," "Second Memoir on the Inverse Method of Definite Integrals," "Third Memoir on the Same."

THOMAS MURPHY.

Thomas Murphy, son of William and Mary Murphy, was born in the County Antrim, Ireland, February 6, 1824. His parents moved to the United States in 1834, when Thomas was ten years old, settling in New Hartford, N. Y. He attended the local schools and later entered the College of New Jersey, from which he graduated with high honors, receiving the degree of A.B. in 1848. He received his degree of B.D. from the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1848. On October 11, 1849, he was ordained in Philadelphia, being immediately appointed pastor of the Frankford Presbyterian Church, where he served as pastor from 1849 to 1894, and as pastor emeritus from 1894 to 1900.

He was appointed delegate to the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church several times, and was a commissioner to the general assemblies of Scotland and Ireland in 1873. In the Irish assembly he offered a resolution which led to the holding of the Pan-Presbyterian council. He was the prime mover and leader in organizing over twenty new churches in the Philadelphia Presbytery. For fourteen years he was a member of the Presbyterian board of publication, and was one of the organizers of the Sabbath school work of that board. He was president of the Log College anniversary, September 5, 1889. He received the degree of D.D. from the College of New Jersey in 1872, and of LL.D. from Washington College in 1891. He died in Philadelphia, December 26, 1900.

THOMAS EDW. MURPHY, S. J.

THOMAS EDWARD MURPHY.

Thomas Edward Murphy, educator, was born in New York City, January 27, 1856. He attended the public schools and later St. Francis Xavier College, New York; studied at Sault au R'eiollet, Canada, 1875-76; West Park on the Hudson, New York, 1876-79; took a course in philosophy at Woodstock College, Md., 1879-82, and a course in theology there, 1887-90. He was professor of Latin and Greek at Georgetown University, D. C., 1893-95, and president of St. Francis Xavier College, 1894-1900. He was the chosen prefect of studies at Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass., August 1, 1900.

RICHARD JOSEPH MURPHY.

Richard Joseph Murphy, distinguished journalist and press secretary of the World's Columbian Exposition, was born in Boston, March 1, 1861, but at an early age he removed to Chicago with his parents. He has the advantage of a thorough practical training in journalism, in which profession he is a post-graduate.

While still at college, he began newspaper work in an amateur way, and laid the foundation of a future reputation as a good, all-round newspaper writer. His first real newspaper work was in connection with the "Chicago Evening Journal," in 1881, with which paper he unqualifiedly made good as a professional journalist. In 1882 he was promoted to the organization and development of the "Daily Press" of Chicago, as secretary of the Press Company. For a year the young secretary struggled hard against the difficulties attending the publication of a metropolitan daily in competition with papers of strong financial backing and large circulation. Notwithstanding his gallant fight, the paper had to be sold to a new company, which changed the name to the "Chicago Mail and Press." To-day this is an established newspaper, and is known as the "Chicago Mail."

After disposing of his interest in the "Press," Mr. Murphy returned to the "Journal," where he filled various positions in the city department for two years. In 1885, Mr. Murphy visited Washington, D. C., representing a syndicate of western newspapers for the inauguration of Cleveland as president. Later, returning to Chicago, he was appointed to the railroad and real estate desk of the "Chicago Herald." In connection with this work came the knowledge of the great need in Chicago of a system of transferring freight without involving the cost and delay of cartage through the crowded thoroughfares of that city. It was from this knowledge that the United States Warehouse Company was evolved.

Our journalist, perceiving the great advantage in time and money of the belt system, a neutral road, encircling Chicago and connecting with all the great lines converging at that point, conceived and elaborated the plan which afterward took the form of the United States Company. By this plan, freight received from the east in carload lots within the company's warehouse, is stored for any length of time, and again reshipped without cartage. As the organizer and developer of this great project, Mr. Murphy has raised a gigantic monument to his perception, energy and ability. He was appointed secretary of the company, but when the necessity for an eastern manager arose, he sold all his business interests in Chicago and accepted the general agency of the United States Warehouse Company, with headquarters in New York City. Here, again, he was eminently successful, and was enjoying a prosperous business and literary career when, without solicitation, the newly elected directors of the World's Columbian Exposition, in May, 1890, urged him to accept the press secretaryship. The position was a coveted one, many very prominent newspaper men being eager applicants for the place.

In view of this, Mr. Murphy felt the offer to be especially flattering, and accepted it. His wide business experience, his newspaper acumen, and his application of sound common-sense principles to his work, all helped to the success which attended the administration of his duties at the fair.

JOHN FRANCIS MURPHY.

John Francis Murphy, artist, was born in Oswego, N. Y., in 1853. He attended the public schools in his native town, devoting his spare hours to the study of art. His work soon attracted attention on account of the harmony of his color schemes. He was elected a member of the American Artists in 1883, and was made National Academician in 1887. He was also a member of the American Water Colors Society. He received the second Hallgarten prize at the National Academy for his picture entitled "Tints of a Vanished Past." He was awarded the Webb prize at the Society of American Artists in 1887, and won the Carnegie prize in 1902. His work is all the more remarkable from the fact that his studies were conducted without a teacher. Among his principal paintings are "Sunny Slopes," "Weedy Brook," "The Yellow Leaf," "October Fog," "Sundown," "Woodland," "October," and "Brooks and Fields."

REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Every man who responds to the name of Murphy must, on a survey of the following list of his namesakes who served in the Revolutionary War, feel his heart beat with a greater throb. One hundred and thirty years have passed since this roster of the name of Murphy was written in the army roll of the revolted colonies. Your forefathers or their relatives from the old land were in at the birth of that flag which has attracted to its protection during the past one hundred and thirty years so many millions of their fellow countrymen, that flag which during these one hundred and thirty years has led the world in the paths of stainless national honor, in its adherence to the humble forms of democracy and in its munificent provision for education as the rock-bed of democracy. None of our citizens are, or have been, more devoted to the principles for which this flag stands than the descendants of the Murphy clan and the other clans of old Ireland.

You can be sure that your forefathers, or some of their clansmen, were in the combat that wrested this nation from England, to the immense benefit not only of its inhabitants, but as an exemplar for the world.

Read this list of Murphys, which is only a partial one, as only six colonies kept a roster of those who served in the Revolution, so that you can be sure that there were many others in addition to these of the name of Murphy who, one hundred and thirty years ago, were storming trenches, wading rivers and charging embattled heights, carrying Old Glory, then newly born, to victory.

The descendants of the forty-one families who came over in the Mayflower were a very small part of the thousands who composed the Continental Army, and yet there are those today who would try to persuade you that they did it all.

If you have a tender regard for the land of your forefathers, and possess that Irish sentiment which loves the line of ancestry stretching back to the McMorchoe clan, your eye must necessarily light with enthusiasm as you read this partial list of the Murphy family, who were at the front when this great country was wrested from monarchical control and given over to its inhabitants upon democratic principles, and which has become, under this happy form of government, the pleasantest land that the sun shines upon.

FAMILY NAME IN REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

MASSACHUSETTS.

JOHN MURPHY: Private, Capt. Samuel Clark's company, Col. Benjamin's regiment, Berkshire County. Enlisted, Oct. 26, 1780, service three days. Company marched to northern frontier, by order of Gen. Fellows, on an alarm.

RICHARD MURPHY: Rutland; list of men raised to serve in the Continental Army, from 7th Worcester regiment, Dec. 29, 1777; engaged for town of Barre; joined Capt. Brine's company.

THOMAS MURPHY: Dedham; Continental Army; joined Capt. Crowley's company, Col. Crane's regiment, term three years, to expire April 16, 1780. Later re-enlisted as a sailor; also in list of men raised to serve in the Continental Army, from Col. McIntosh's (1st Suffolk County) regiment.

WILLIAM MURPHY: Sergeant Enos Dean's detachment of guards; service, fifteen days, by order of Committee of Correspondence, etc., in order to prevent the escape of Highlanders and other prisoners from Taunton jail, during the alarm of Dec. 8, 1776.

GEORGE MURPHY: Wells; enlisted June 6, 1778; discharged Jan. 29, 1779; re-enlisted, joining Capt. Daniel Clark's company, Col. Joseph Primes' regiment; regiment raised in York County, for defense of eastern Massachusetts.

JOHN MURPHY: Capt. Clark's company, Col. Benjamin Simond's Berkshire County regiment. Enlisted Aug. 14, 1777; discharged, Aug. 21, 1777, service eight days. Company took part in the battle of Wallumsick, near Bennington, Aug. 16, 1777, and later convoyed provisions to Pittsfield; roll certified at Williamstown. THE BIVOUAC OF THE DEAD.

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
The soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade shall meet
That brave and fallen few.
On Fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead.

No rumor of the foe's advance
Now swells upon the wind;
No troubled thought at midnight haunts
Of loved ones left behind;
No vision of the morrow's strife
The warrior's dream alarms;
No braying horn or screaming fife
At dawn shall call to arms.

Their shivered swords are red with rust,
Their pluméd heads are bowed;
Their haughty banner trailed in dust,
Is now their martial shroud;

And plenteous funeral tears have washed
The red stains from each brow,
And the proud forms by battle gashed
Are free from anguish now.

The neighing troop, the flashing blade,
The bugle's stirring blast,
The charge, the dreadful cannonade,
The din and shout are past;
Nor war's wild note, nor glory's peal
Shall thrill with fierce delight
Those breasts that never more may feel
The rapture of the fight.

Like the fierce northern hurricane
That sweeps his great plateau,
Flushed with the triumph yet to gain,
Came down the serried foe;
Who heard the thunder of the fray
Break o'er the field beneath,
Knew well the watchword of that day
Was victory or death.

Full many a Norther's breath has swept
O'er Angostura's plain,
And long the pitying sky has wept
Above its mouldered slain.
The raven's scream, or eagle's flight,
Or shepherd's pensive lay,
Alone now wakes each solemn height
That frowned o'er that dread fray.

Sons of the Dark and Bloody Ground,
Ye must not slumber there,
Where stranger steps and tongues resound
Along the heedless air;

Your own proud land's heroic soil
Shall be your fitter grave;
She claims from war its richest spoil —
The ashes of her brave.

Thus 'neath their parent turf they rest,
Far from the gory field;
Borne to a Spartan mother's breast
On many a bloody shield.
The sunshine of their native sky
Smiles sadly on them here,
And kindred eyes and hearts watch by
The heroes' sepulchre.

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead,
Dear as the blood ye gave!
No impious footstep here shall tread
The herbage of your grave;
Nor shall your glory be forgot
While Fame her record keeps,
Or honor points the hallowed spot
Where valor proudly sleeps.

Yon marble minstrel's voiceless stone
In deathless song shall tell,
When many a vanished year hath flown,
The story how ye fell;
Nor wreck, nor change, nor winter's blight,
Nor time's remorseless doom,
Can dim one ray of holy light
That gilds your glorious tomb.

THE CIVIL WAR.

At the time of the Civil War, those of Irish birth or descent formed a very considerable part of the population of this country, and almost every regiment of the Union Army had among its number soldiers of the name of Murphy.

The long list of the family name which follows will indicate how large was their share in the preservation of the Union, and the list is not a complete total of the enlistments of men of that name, since the records of Delaware and Oregon are not available. Probably every engagement from Bull Run to Appomatox had their services.

Those of the name immediately from Ireland or of recent descent, in common with others of Irish blood, felt that they were obligated to prove their devotion to the nation which had offered them an asylum and an equality of opportunity, and their services and lives were freely given to the cause of the Union.

Not only were they desirous of acquitting themselves of their obligations as good citizens, but they were also impelled by a pride of blood, and by the hope that their children might be honored as the descendants of those who had aided in the founding and preservation of the nation.

They proved themselves the worthy successors of those of the name who had participated in the Revolutionary War, and their number was immensely greater, corresponding proportionately with the increase in population of those of Irish blood.

The position of honor which the name of Murphy holds in American history may be seen by an examination of the army records of any one of the states. Pennsylvania had seventy-nine of the name in the ranks of the Revolutionary Army, and more than six hundred in the Union ranks.

What person of the name can fail to contemplate with a pardonable pride this record, and the fact that so many of this name alone are found to have participated in these great wars is an index to the relatively large number of Irish blood who served under the flag whenever it was in danger.
